The plan shows the Roman city of Cosa, a well-preserved example of a Roman colony. The city is laid out on a grid system, with the main north-south axis being the Decumanus Pietri and the east-west axis being the Cardineus. The forum is located at the intersection of these two main streets. To the right of the forum is the temple, and to the left is the amphitheatre. The city is surrounded by a wall, and the plan shows the location of the city's gates. The plan is overlaid on a topographic map showing the city's location on a hillside. The grid system is clearly visible, with the Decumanus and Cardines forming a network of streets. The plan includes labels for various streets and landmarks, such as Via Stovarnacea, Via del Castropola, and the Decumanus Pietri. The grid is overlaid on a topographic map showing the city's location on a hillside.
